d. Equipment

7 to 8 IAR-39 airplanes
 2 PO-a planes
 2 Fisseler-Storch planes
 6 to 7 TU-2 planes.

During 1952 the 6 Bomber Regiment nearly completed its complement with new pilots but was not able to carry out the planned training program, due to the move from the airport of Stalin (Brasov) to the airport at Targsor and also because of the delay in the shipment of Soviet equipment. Because of the delay, training with the new planes consisted merely in ground demonstrations rather than actual flying.

3. The 17 Bomber Regiment

Location: Targsor Airport near Floesti.
 Commander: Major Gheorghe Seniuc.
 Political Commissar: Lt. Ion Ghinea. In the spring of 1952, he escaped to Yugoslavia with a Heinkel airplane and was replaced by Lt. Major Ion. Rusu, formerly with the political section of the 7 Bomber Division.

Organization:

The regiment is composed of three squadrons of three patrols each, with three planes in each patrol.

c. 3 Squadron

Commander: Lt. Major Cristea Postelnicu.
Commander's Assistant: Lt. Bobaru.

d. Equipment:

The 17 Bomber Regiment has the following planes:

- 6 TU-2 planes
- 4 TU-6 planes
- 4 Nardi planes
- 2 PO-2 planes
- 2 Heinkel-111 planes
- 6 IAR-39 planes

With the exception of the IAR-39 and Nardi planes (which are used for training for daytime flying) and the PO-2 planes (which are used for night flying), out of all the planes in the regiment only the Soviet ones are fit to be used in modern warfare. This is because the Heinkel planes are both old and worn, and since they are discontinued, no spare parts are available. A Soviet adviser (a colonel), in charge of procuring equipment, who came on an inspection tour with a group of air force general staff officers, said that the unit would shortly be fully equipped with Soviet planes.
